

The American Library in Paris

ANNUAL REPORT 2013

The year in review

So many things are happening at the American Library in Paris these days that it is difficult to single out a few for 2013. But here are five highlights:

- The Library launched an annual Book Award for the best book in English about France or the French-American encounter. The $5,000 prize, underwritten by the Florence Gould Foundation, went to Fredrik Logevall for Embers of War: The Fall of an Empire and the Making of America's Vietnam.
- The Library underwent another phase of physical renovations, including a new roof, new electrical systems and lighting, and new restrooms.
- Thanks to the initiative and support of The de Groot Foundation, the Library offered its first Visiting Fellowship. Writer Anthony Flint came to the Library to complete his work-in-progress on the life of the architectural master Le Corbusier.
- Thanks to private gifts, the Library replaced its electronic card catalog with a state-of-the-art system designed for both public and internal management of collections and membership.
- The Library's board of trustees completed its strategic planning process with a one-page statement looking to reinvent the Library's physical plant and collections.

Plus a successful gala dinner with Joyce Carol Oates, a visit from Justice Anthony M. Kennedy, a Halloween party that drew 800 children and their parents to the Library, new music and art offerings, new workshops, new self-checkout ... 2013 was another banner year for the Library.
